A self-described “sappy soul whisperer and sarcasm aficionado,” Shelby Spear is a wife of 26 years and a mom of three 20-something kiddos who has a deep love for Jesus and storytelling. Most days she muses in rhetorical wonder over what God was thinking when He put her in charge of three humans. Although God’s quick to remind her how capable she is, apparently He sometimes does so while crossing His fingers behind His back.

Now that she and her husband, John, are in a season of empty nest, Shelby spends her days writing about all the ways motherhood has shaped, transformed, inspired, and aged her. She has numerous stories in print at the national publication, Guideposts, the most recent in the January 2019 issue called, Our 40 Day Soul Fast, as well as all over the web at places like Her View From Home, For Every Mom, Today, Scary Mommy, and others. Shelby is the loving and goofball hostess of a growing family of friends on her blog at shelbyspear.com and across social media outlets.

While John and her children graffiti her soul, all things chocolate melt her heart. Music stirs her like no other, crying fulfills her, and a love of sports keeps her competitive streak alive. Some of her favorite things in life are books, yoga, This Is Us, and a comfy pair of jeans—most notably the stretchy kind. Denim defines her in a bluesy kind of way.

Lisa Leshaw

Lisa is excited to be entering a new frontier in her life: meeting the eligibility requirement for Dunkin' Donuts senior discount. Because she's now a 'biddy,' she lives in the same attire as new mommas: t-shirts and sweats for daily living and extravagant affairs.

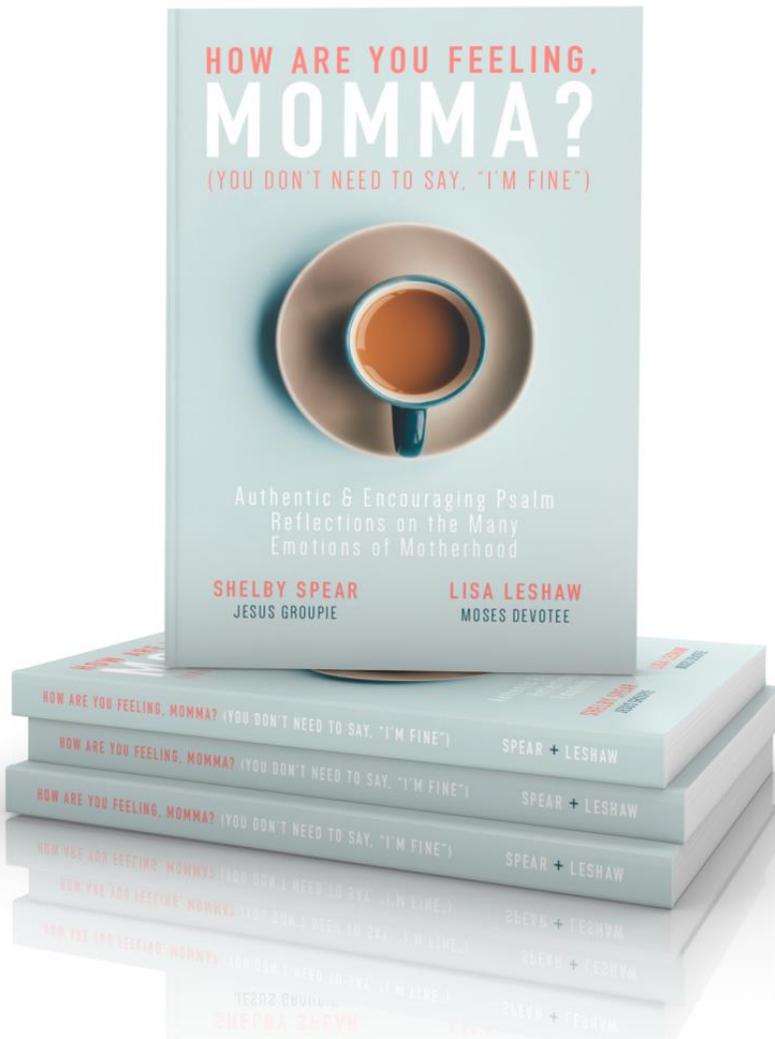

She is an avid storyteller with plenty of material to pull from in her role as wife of 40+ years to Stu, step-mom to a son and daughter, both in their early forties, and a grandma to six grandbabies: five boys and one girl, ages 5-18. You can find her words online at The Bubelah on Facebook and in print at places like Her View From Home, Grown and Flown, Guideposts, and Chicken Soup for the Soul.

Her decades of experience as a mental health professional along with her weekly empowerment circles give mommas of every age a place to celebrate themselves and one another. She prays every day that the world becomes a more tolerant and accepting place—hoping that each one of us will work towards making a lasting contribution to ensure this outcome.

Lisa also loves children's theater and is ready to pursue a career in stand-up comedy if someone discovers she's funny. Her children's book, A Royal Mistake, is ready to be published if someone discovers she's written it.

When it's all said and done, Lisa's wish is that everyone walk with lightness, giggle easily, and land softly someday in the arms God.

One thing EVERY mom on the planet needs is this: to know she is not alone in how she feels. Although our individual experiences as a mom are unique, the emotions of motherhood are universal no matter what season of motherhood we are in.

None of us are immune to feeling afraid, alone, confused, distraught, overwhelmed, depressed, and guilty—among a million other feely things. Yet, so often when someone asks, “How are you feeling?” we respond with, “I’m fine,” when we’re so NOT FINE. We tend to keep these sentiments to ourselves, pretending to have it all together for fear of exposing our weaknesses.

This book is a sigh of relief as you come to realize you are not alone in how you feel. How Are You Feeling, Momma? is a collection of 31 short reflections giving you a peek into the inner life of Shelby and Lisa as they share all the emotions they've grappled with as moms over many years. In each chapter, you will read two perspectives on a specific emotion and corresponding Psalm scripture. One captures the emotion from Shelby's experience as a Christian mom and the other from Lisa's vantage point as a Jewish step-mom and grandma.

With vulnerability and a hefty dose of wit, Shelby and Lisa will:

- Inspire you to lean into and get real about your mom feelings
- Give you two perspectives on each emotion through both a Jewish and Christian lens
- Encourage you to feel comforted in knowing you aren't alone in how you feel
- Help you connect the pleadings in the Psalms to the pleadings in your soul

While on paper, these two would appear to be polar opposites, ironically, their differences are the adhesive that binds them. A serendipitous online encounter brought them together, and these two are living proof that despite differing views, background, and culture when it comes to God all things are possible through love. It may take a village to raise a child, but it also takes a village to care for the village. Consider these words a giant group hug for all of us.

TESTIMONIALS

“It’s in this book where you will find freedom from hiding, from holding in those true emotions, from having to keep it all together with a perfectly coined, “I’m fine.” You can be real here. You can be you. You can reveal those sensitive parts and secret struggles as you realize you are not alone.”

Christine Carter, mom of two teens ages 13 and 15, and author of, Help and Hope While You're Healing: A woman's guide toward wellness while recovering from injury, surgery, or illness Blogs at Themomcafe.com

“As a mother of six, reading, How Are You Feeling, Momma? is like sitting on my front porch with a couple of friends and having a much-needed conversation.”

Laura Wolf, mom of six, ages 10 and under

“However you’re feeling at the moment, Momma—from afraid to worshipful to something in between—you’re not alone, and this reassuring resource offers proof of that from two beautiful moms who aren’t willing to settle for “I’m fine” and don’t think you should either.”

Elizabeth Spencer, mom of one teen and one 20-something daughter. Blogs at guiltychocoholicmama.blogspot.com

“This book is a delightful guide for mothers and grandmothers to reflect on the spiritual joys & challenges of motherhood”

Sandy McLeod, mom of two and grandmother of three

“Whether we identify as Jewish or Christian, as moms, when we open Scripture, we’re reading the same Psalms. It’s a beautiful thing to realize, as these women did, the way we apply the truths we read, in our home lives, our communities, and in our places of worship, are remarkably similar too.”

Traci Rhoades, mom of one 11 year-old. Blogs at tracesoffaith.com

“How Are You Feeling, Momma? is helpful, but it is so much more. Eloquently written, fresh, and dear. I felt seen and heard. Perfect.”

Jami Amerine, mom of 6 and author of Sacred Ground, Sticky Floors and Stolen Jesus

“How Are You Feeling, Momma? (You Don't Need To Say, "I'm Fine.")": Authentic & Encouraging Psalm Reflections on the Many Emotions of Motherhood by Shelby Spear and Lisa Leshaw is an engaging book that speaks about the challenges of motherhood. The parenting journey is not that easy and every mother has her share of ups and downs during the various stages and phases of growth of their children. Though each one has their unique parenting road, there are many common issues they all face, challenges they all encounter, and struggles they all endure. There is a universal bond all moms experience which is created through a mutual understanding of love and passion they have for their children. This book will give all moms the wisdom and understanding they require, and give them the confidence to reveal their secret struggles and sensitive issues.

Motherhood is a beautiful experience and I like the two different views about a topic that is so relevant. The 31 short reflections take readers into the inner lives and emotions of both the authors, which are universal. Reading the experiences of the authors will give comfort to all mothers and grandmothers out there to know that they are not alone. The book is fresh and original, and the personal reflection question at the end of each chapter is good when it comes to reflecting and introspecting. The book will take moms closer to God and will help them realize that it is hard to get stuck in the muck when they focus on God and his glory. I like the authors' approach to the topic; it is different and I like how the authors seamlessly knit their two faiths into the topic of motherhood and include psalms to help moms handle motherhood more easily."

Judge's Commentary*:

Outstanding opener to the book, as the authors establish a nice, relatable foundation so that the reader feels heard, understood and supported (i.e. “there are common issues we all face” that helps with a sigh of relief.) Beautiful embracing of the reader. We know we are spending our time well with this book, as comfortable as we're invited to feel right from the start.

‘Each chapter will drench you in grace’ is a standout example of the authors’ lovely use of description in sensory detail that brings their words to life. Beautifully done. I loved the spotlight on ‘fake it till you make it’ insights that can often sprout feelings of inauthenticity and dread. That alone is a book’s worth of healings and straightening out outdated advice. Well done.

Personal Reflections sections are strong, with fresh leading questions and plenty to assess. The authors identify which of them is speaking, deftly avoiding confusion. We get a duo of identifiable voices with fabulous transitions between them. Well done.

Authors have avoided danger points in sharing a narrative and providing a nice sense of organization in their content. Scripture is nicely-chosen with a fine mix of known and little-known Scripture to give the reader excellent inspiration, and – when they do recognize a bit of Scripture that they do know – a sense of self-confidence, that they are a bit on the right track with the things already in their knowledge. Very well done. This is accomplished through providing such a wide range of insights, questions, considerations and beautifully-chosen material when warranted. Not overdone, not skimpy. I found that to be one of the many strengths of this book.

PSALMS FOR ALONE MOMS

Shelby's Reflection

Perhaps one of the greatest oxymorons of all time is a 'lonely mother' when you consider the 24/7 demands of little people. But loneliness is real and hits all of us up for many reasons. Sometimes we feel alone because we've lost our identity in motherhood. Other times we're lonely because we've reached the empty nest stage. One of the worst feelings of isolation is when we pay admission to the I'm the only one who club. The only mom who screams at her kids, burns dinner, forgets the tooth fairy, or leaves a basement door open, resulting in a toddler plummeting down the stairs. (That'd be me. I might be the only one). Or we believe we are the only mom who fights neediness, depression, insecurity, resentment, frustration, anger. The only mom who has a child who is _____ or does _____. We run these scripts through our minds, isolating ourselves even further out of fear, shame, and remorse.

An even harder scenario is the single mom, or the mom who balances everything because her husband works seven days a week, or the Mom whose spouse is sick and needs constant medical care. All situations produce heavy and tangible loneliness.

But we're never the only one who anything. There are thousands of Moms out there struggling just like we are—feeling the same feelings, battling the same wars. When we dare to be authentic and vulnerable about our feelings, we'll find soul sisters ready to "me too" us into fullness and connection. I can't tell you the number of times I've gaped when finding out my experiences as a mom aren't unique. The ache of loneliness can evaporate in an instant when we find common ground with another.

Admitting our sense of isolation is no easy task. In fact, doing so can feel humiliating. This is where God comes in. If we cry out to Him first by saying, "Look at me and help me! I'm all alone and in big trouble." (Psalm 25:16 MSG), we might find out God has the perfect friend or even a total stranger ready to meet us where we're at. He works wonders that way. All we need to do is be on the lookout.

Lisa's Reflection

Being a mom can sometimes be a lonely experience despite the beauty and glory of this role. It seems contradictory to logic that we can feel alone amidst our children and all the daily routines that consume us, mind, body, and soul.

Yet have we not all found ourselves sitting in the middle of the living room rug on the verge of tears or well past the floodgates bursting open and wondering why? What's wrong with me? I have everything! I should be grateful for these miracles.

We keep these feelings to ourselves for fear that we will be judged. We hold on to the shame and guilt and never realize that the mom next door is sitting on HER living room rug contemplating the same feelings.

The vastness of our responsibility as moms could break us if we gave it too much thought.

So when we feel alone there are ways to combat the aloneness and ones I am certain are God-approved:

- Take a walk outside with your little ones, and smile at a stranger; it humanizes everything and causes an immediate change in perspective. You might well bump into another lonely mom, and if you help her feel better, it helps you as well!

- Sing! God gave us a voice so we could rejoice, and there's no better way to lift your spirit than to burst out in song. Grab your childhood microphone (hairbrush) and let it rip! If the neighbor chooses to close her window to drown you out, even better.

- Look through a photo album, which is a scrapbook of your life and a glorious reminder of the miles you have walked to get here. It, too, brings perspective back into focus.

- Take a look in the mirror and say 'Thank You' to YOU for doing an extraordinary job under incredibly difficult and challenging circumstances every day. Isn't motherhood beautiful and so challenging simultaneously?

When you find yourself stuck in the muck of motherhood, in the trenches where we all have been, open your Bible and read Psalm 40:2 (NIV): "He lifted me out of the slimy pit, out of the mud and mire; he set my feet on a rock and gave me a firm place to stand."

Personal Reflection:

What is one action you can take today to feel connected?
